“ Hi, Auntie Lyli. I miss you terribly and think about you often. How often I think of both you and my mama. Every single time American Pie by Don McLean comes on, I think of you. I was 11 years old when you danced with me to that song. It was one of my favorite memories with you. Everytime I hear that song the memories of you dance in my head. Thank you for protecting me while I healed. Thank you for helping me find myself again. I know how much you and mom were by my side and still are. I'll see you in the stars.

“ The day of Lyli’s and Warrens accident I went to the hospital as soon as Warren called me. Spent time with Lyli first because Warren was in testing. Lyli was in so much pain but she was smiling. I started crying and she was comforting me. That is the way Lyli was. She loved my brother so much and he her. Their love for each other was undeniable. Little did I know that when I left that day to bring Warren home, and hugged her and told her I loved her and waved goodbye that that would be for the last time. Such a tragic and unnecessary death of a wonderful sister-in-law that is so heartbreaking. Warren is devastated and he misses her so much. I will miss her too. I will miss her smile. Her kind words. Her laughing at my brother and i’s arguments and her saying ‘that’s your brother.’ I will miss the parties they used to have and the awesome food she made. I will miss how I saw the love in her eyes for my brother and how well she took care of him and he her. And so much more. She is as they say in a better place now but that reminds me of her comment the day of their accident when I started crying she said ‘I’m not sure who something like this is harder on, the people that get in an accident or the family that helps them through it.’ Then she said, ‘I’m so glad you are here.’ That was Lyli.
